The Legal Framework for Motor Vehicle Distribution - A New Model?	3	8
--	---	---

Block Exemption Regulation 1475/95, which applies to the motor vehicle industry, expires on September 30, 2002. Pressure to remove the block exemption has been growing and it is unlikely to be renewed; what replaces it, if anything, is a key issue for the European car industry. This article considers whether a new regulatory framework based on the new BER2790/99 might be a more suitable model of distribution, given recent developments in car retailing.

The Regulatory Hurdles Ahead in B2B

9 12

Business-to-business (B2B) marketplaces are causing headaches for business and competition authorities alike. The question now is whether early cases, such as myaircraft.com and ec4ec, have implications for whether and how future B2B marketplaces will avoid regulatory problems. This article discusses the main competition issues, future developments and identifies practical steps being taken to ensure regulatory clearance.

Balancing Database Sui Generis Right Protection with European Monopoly Control under Article 82 E.C.

This article examines the interface between European monopoly control under Article 82 E.C. following the EVJ judgment in the Magill case with respect to sui generis right database protection as provided for by the European Database Directive. It focuses on the extent to which Magill will enable the European Court of Justice to prevent information monopolies after the Database Directive has given an exclusive right in information as parts of a database requiring substantial investment.

Westkamp, Guido

Encouraging Competition and Innovation in the Local Loop: The Issues of Cross-Ownership and Line-of-Business Restrictions

25 30

This article recognises that the cross-ownership phenomenon undermines the incentive of cable networks to invest and compete in the telecoms market. It comments on the effectiveness of the requirement for legal separation of telephone and cable interests and examines the Commission's policy in relation to those measures which introduce line-of-business restrictions.
